THE CONCORD BANK ROBBERY.

The Arrest of One of the Perpetrators and Recovery of a Portion of the Stelen Punds—An Interesting Narrative of Guilt and Its Detection—Curious Chapter in Scientific Crime—The Robbers in the Bank Over a Hundred Nights-The Strong Box in the Vault Defies Their Efforts-An Accident Surrenders Them the Treasure at Last-The Detectives in Pursuit for Four Months, &c., &c.

On the 25th of Suptember last, it may be remembered by the public, the Concord (National) Bank of Concord, Massachusetts, was entered by thieves in broad daylight, during the absence of the cashier at dinner, and robbed to the amount of three hundred and ten thousand dollars in United States boads and securities, notes and meney, the entire funds of the institution at the time. The thorough manner in which the robbery was effected and the inventity which its executors displayed in planning the ingonuity which its executors displayed in planning and carrying out their designs exhibit a degree of science on their part perfectly astonishing in the annals of one of the criminals and discovering a large portion of the abstracted funds are invested with no less interest. In fact, the circumstances attending both the robbery and the detection of one of its perpetrators are highly tinged with romance, and form a most absorbing chapter een the hours of twelve and two, in the daytime, up by the cashier, Mr. Chency, during his absence at dinner. The stolen funds embraced a large quantity of the deposits of the Middlessex Savings Institution, and the less fell not only upon the bank from which they were abstracted, but upon hundreds of people whose bard-carned savings had been deposited there for secu-rity. The cashier on the day named had, before leaving the building, locked up all valuables in the strong box or an'e in the vault, and put the key behind some books on a shelf. He then locked the door of the vault itself, put in his pocket, descended the stairs, locked the ding into the street, the key of which he also put socked, but the key had been taken away. It was now evident, of course, that it had been visited during his pattern, and was provided with two keys only, one of which the thieves had carried away. The other was in ne possession of Mr. Heywood, the President, who was absent in Boston, and six hours elapsed before he re-tarned, in obedience to a tolegram, when the extent of the robbery first became known.

THE ALD OF THE POLICE SOUGHT. Colonel Kurtz, Chief of Police of Boston, was immedi-tely consulted, and offered the bank officers the services of detectives Heath and Jones, and, subsequently, Hunt, of his force. They came on to New York and reported the obbory to Superintendent Kennedy, who placed the mair in the hands of Chief John S. Young, Captain Joursmar in the mants of Chief some S. Toung, Captain Sour-dan, of the Sixth precinct, and detectives Elder, McCord, Radford and Keiser. The impression at first was that the robbery had been effected through the agency or con-nivance of some one acquainted with the bank—it had een so cleanly done. Superintendent Kennedy offered ore unfolded to the latter. The circumstances were ertainly of a most meagre character to afford much hope f success in ferreting out the thieves, but Captain Jour-an from the first moment entertained the belief, and at nary what under the circumstances seems a most mar opinion, viz: that one of the guilty less was a man known to the police for a time, but whose name is suppressed for the ent, or until his accomplices are secured. bery, is a secret of his profession which he chooses keep to hunself. It is a gift, however, of a most valuthe nature, and may well inspire criminals with fear for the commercence of their cvil deeds.

IN PURSUIT. an. Detective Hunt went to Framingham, about twenty sles from Boston, where he was known to have had a im or even to trace his whereabouts proved unavailing t was reasonably supposed that the suspected person ertain individual to be that man, and accordingly this reon received most assiduous attention from detec-res Hunt and Elder for a period of two months. He was followed by them as closely as his shadow, and no movement of his during that time escaped their obser-

This man, in the vocabulary of the detectives, was what is called a very "leary" man—that is, he was extraor-ofnarily watchful. Like all men engaged in inlawful work, he was at all times suspicious that his movements were under scruting, and accordingly it was no easy the fact. For instance, on emerging from his house he down the street; then he would pass down to the next

ON THE TRACK ONCE MORE.

The officers were still of the opinion that the latter had an agent in this city to dispose of the bonds, and they set their new assistant to work to find that agent. The latter soon discovered a man who, at his solicitation, agreed to formish twenty thousand dollars worth of bonds, at seventy-five per cent of their par value. The man savine would have to wait some time before he could get Use bonds, but promised to deliver what he could get Use bonds, but promised to deliver what he could get Use bonds, but promised to deliver what he could get Use bonds, but promised to deliver what he could get Use bonds, but promised to deliver what he could get Use bonds, but promised to deliver what he could get Use bonds, but promised to deliver what he could get Use bonds, but promised to deliver what he could get Use bonds, but promised to deliver what he could get Use bonds, but promised to deliver what he could get Use bonds, but promised to deliver what he would like to leave some money in his friend, acceptant the first of his friend, on going to the station house, opened the package in the fell, and found it so contain two thousand four hundred and thirty dollars in notes of the old issue of the Concord bank, a portion of the stolen funds. Here at length was the first tangible proof that the detectives were on the right track. It would have been botter had the detective been able to trace the agent who had gene to Philadelphia, but the officers felt certain that he would keep his appointment with his friend, when another opportunity would be afforded them to trace through him the whereabonts of the main party. The interval to Sundsy, the 21st tult, passed without any further developments. On the morning of the appointed day the agent, true to his word, made his appearance in the city, and while passing shrough Fory-lifth street, near Third avenue, or roste to the Fixth precinc station hou and that the numbers of the bonds taken from the prisence were not out the list.

SKILPUL COUNTERPREYING.

The bank officers were consulted, and they examined the bonds, but could not identify them as belonging to them. Detective Elder next took them to Mr. Van Dyke, at the Sub-Treasury office, whose experts were called in, and examined the figures. The clerks were unable to discover anything wrong, and gave it as their opinion that the numbers were genuine. The bonds were next shown to the American Bank Note Company; but the experts there were also unable to detect any alteration or addition in the figures. The officers still believed that the numbers were forged; but, as it was impossible to detect the fact immediately, and as the prisoner was entitled to a discharge from custody if no complaint was sustained against him, it was necessary to adopt some immediate strategy. Accordingly a plan was arranged and worked as follows:—The friend was given the package in tin foil once more, and while the agent was seated in the private office of Captain Jourdan, in the station house, his friend was brought in, apparently a prisoner also. On examination of his person, of course the package of bank notes originally given to him by the agent was found. The agent during the examination maintained a most wonderful coolness, and smoked a cigar with undistwhed equanimity, even when the package was produced.

cigar with undistushed equanimity, even when the package was produced.

UNEARTHING THE SECRET.

Both prisoners were then remanded to a cell in the station house with the hope that the agreat would unboarm himself to his pseudo-confederate and disclose some clew to the whereabouts of the supposed principal. In the evening they were called to the office, and after a short examination by Judge Dowling were separated for reasons of safety, it was said, and detective Elder left the building with the apparent intention of conveying the friend to the lockup at headquariers, while the agreat was remanded to his cell. The former was then questioned as to what had taken place in the cell, when it appeared that the latter had refused to converse with him believing that some one was listening to them, but did not suspect that there was any deception in the arrest of the friend. Next morning both were again brought together in the lodgers' ward of the station house, where they were furnished with break, fast. The agent, during the meal, "weekened," as the detectives call it—that is, he became more disposed to talk, and opened a conversation with his friend as to the notes. The latter said "he wasn't going to State Prison for the thing, and rather than do so he would tell where he got the money." This alarmed the agent, and he also said he would make a clean breast of his share of the business if he could get out of the scrape, and, calling in Captain Jourdan, he said he was willing to confess all; that he had been and honest man, but was driven by necessity into his present evildong.

The authorities were consoled and the promise was primited. It said, "All right, gonthemes, to work you in a minute." A servant opened the door almost as sood as the sentence was completed. Three of the officers rested in and were proceeding to mout the sain when they were halled by the same voice again, they saw the identical individual of whom they were in search standing at buy on the landing, and suming pictod down the stainway. BOTHER MATRIX—In Baltimore, on Thursday, February 12, Mannay 12, wax. On being opened it was found to contain over a hundred thousand dollars in United States government bonds and other securities. En accord? The party next proceeded to the river's edge, and communed digging in a sandy strip between high and low tide. After delving for some time they struck epon and restrected a nicely made in box, clongated in shape, covered up with old cloth and seating was. On opening it the officers found seventy-six thousand dollars in bonds and similar valuables, making the total amount recovered to this time one hundred and hinety-nine thousand three hundred and thirty-one follars. In the house were found a number of rolls of the foll, such as the bonds were wrapped up in, and a set of type of figures which were still stained wite red ink as if recently employed in stamping numbers. In proof of the cunning of the prisoner it mighs here be stated that, to throw pursuit upon a false sent, to had written two letters in his usual handwriting, one addressed to a relative in Framingham and the other to an acquaintance in New York, which he see under cover to Hamilton, C. W., where they were remaided to their address, which they reached, dated and petmarked, of course, from that place.
